

Recovering the Mind — Enneagram Integration

Complete Mapping: 9 Types × 59 Slogans

Grace For Addictions · VRCC Personality Intelligence Layer

Document Purpose

This document completes the Enneagram layer of the slogan recommendation engine.

Every entry maps directly to `gfa_slogans.slogan_personality_maps` with framework_type_id = enneagram.

```
```

Each slogan entry contains:

- Which types it most powerfully serves (with `relevance_weight` 1–5)
- `enneagram_context_id` : core=3, growth=1, stress=2, wing=4
- `recommendation_note` : What Grace Companion says to this person about this slogan
- ICARE phase and wellness domain alignment
- Measurable outcomes for that type practicing this slogan

Schema fields used:

```
framework_key          → "1" through "9" (type number as text)
enneagram_context_id → 1=growth · 2=stress · 3=core · 4=wing relevance_weight       → 1-5 (5 = highest, this slogan was written for this type) recommendation_note    → Grace Companion-injectable message (2-4 sentences)
```

Part One: The Nine Types in Recovery

Orientation before application. Understanding why each type struggles where they do.

Type 1 — The Reformer · The Inner Critic

Core wound: I am fundamentally flawed. If I am not perfect, I am bad. Vice: Resentment (suppressed anger at the world's imperfection) Recovery challenge: Rigidity in recovery practices, relentless self-punishment for setbacks, using recovery standards as proof of superiority, inability to receive grace. How addiction served them: Substances temporarily silenced the inner critic. The relief wasn't pleasure — it was a brief reprieve from the exhausting prosecution of the self. The trap in recovery: Treating recovery like another performance standard to meet. Transferring perfectionism from addiction to recovery itself. Using their recovery progress to judge others. Growth direction: Toward Type 7 — spontaneity, joy, lightness, the ability to be in an imperfect moment without trying to correct it. Signature slogans: 26, 28, 30, 31, 49 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q5 (coping — less self-punishment), q2 (believing a good life is possible without perfection), q10 (progress measured honestly rather than against an impossible standard)

Type 2 — The Helper • The Giver

Core wound: I am only lovable if I am needed. Vice: Pride (the pride of being indispensable; denying own needs) Recovery challenge: Helping others to avoid personal recovery work, inability to receive support, building recovery identity around being the most helpful person in the room, difficulty setting limits. How addiction served them: Substances numbed the awareness of their own needs — which felt safer than acknowledging them. The trap in recovery: Becoming the person who "helps" in recovery rather than the person who does recovery. Service as avoidance. Needing to be needed in the community. Growth direction: Toward Type 4 — self-awareness, authenticity, honest contact with their own interior life including what they actually feel and need. Signature slogans: 7, 10, 36, 40, 59 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q6 (getting help — they must learn to receive), q1 (having other important things beyond helping others), q3 (belonging not tied to earned usefulness)

Type 3 — The Achiever • The Performer

Core wound: I am only lovable for what I achieve and how I appear. Vice: Deceit (self-deception — they perform so consistently they lose track of who they actually are) Recovery challenge: Performing recovery rather than living it. Measuring recovery by external metrics — clean time, recognition, visible achievement. Being someone different in every room. How addiction served them: Substances briefly short-circuited the performance pressure and let them simply exist, without being evaluated. The trap in recovery: Becoming the high-achiever of recovery. Being seen as the success story. Using the recovery narrative as a new performance rather than doing the actual inner work. Growth direction: Toward Type 6 — loyalty, genuine commitment beyond performance, the willingness to stay even when it doesn't look good. Signature slogans: 9, 35, 47, 55, 59 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q4 (purpose beyond achievement and applause), q3 (belonging not tied to performance), q10 (progress measured by honest self-assessment, not external validation)

Type 4 — The Individualist • The Romantic

Core wound: I am fundamentally different and something essential is missing in me.

Vice: Envy (longing for what others have; believing others have what they lack)

Recovery challenge: Wallowing in the uniqueness of suffering, romanticizing the addiction narrative, comparing their recovery unfavorably to others, self-pity as identity, reluctance to release the wound because it feels like the truest thing about them. How addiction served them: Substances amplified feeling — and 4s are people who want to feel everything deeply. The intensity of addiction felt, paradoxically, like authenticity.

The trap in recovery: Making their recovery as dramatic and special as their addiction.

Seeing their particular pain as too deep for ordinary recovery tools. Using suffering as identity. Growth direction: Toward Type 1 — discipline, consistency, principles that operate independent of feeling, the ability to act when they don't feel inspired.

Signature slogans: 5, 21, 56, 57, 42 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q2 (believing a genuinely good life is possible for them, not just others), q3 (belonging — their sense of being fundamentally different keeps them outside), q4 (purpose beyond significance-seeking)

Type 5 — The Investigator • The Observer

Core wound: The world is intrusive and I don't have enough inner resources to cope.

Vice: Avarice (hoarding — energy, knowledge, time, themselves) Recovery challenge:

Isolation, over-analyzing recovery without living it, using intellectual understanding as a substitute for genuine change, withdrawing from community when it becomes demanding. How addiction served them: Substances provided a way to manage intrusion — to numb the overwhelm of a world that demanded too much of them. The trap in recovery: Becoming the expert on recovery theory without engaging with community. Understanding the neuroscience without doing the practice. Maintaining detachment as a survival strategy. Growth direction: Toward Type 8 — action, presence, full engagement with life rather than observation of it, the willingness to take up space. Signature slogans: 3, 6, 7, 45, 51 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q3 (belonging — they must enter community), q6 (getting help from others rather than self-sufficiency), q9 (contribution — moving from observer to participant)

Type 6 — The Loyalist • The Questioner

Core wound: The world is dangerous and I cannot trust my own judgment. Vice: Fear (anxiety, scanning for threat, catastrophizing) Recovery challenge: Anxiety about recovery itself, depending on external authority rather than developing inner trust, worst-case thinking that triggers use as pre-emptive self-protection, hedging commitment. How addiction served them: Substances temporarily quieted the anxiety alarm that runs continuously in the 6. The peace was real, even if borrowed. The trap in recovery: Making the recovery community or sponsor into the new authority they depend on rather than developing inner trust. Elaborate relapse prevention planning that manages anxiety instead of building genuine capacity. Growth direction: Toward Type 9 — peace, trust in the goodness of the present moment, the ability to rest without scanning. Signature slogans: 2, 18, 20, 22, 50 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q5 (coping without catastrophizing), q2 (genuinely believing a good life is possible rather than fearing what might go wrong), q6 (getting help they can actually trust rather than depending on external authority)

Type 7 — The Enthusiast • The Epicure

Core wound: I will be trapped in pain and deprivation. Vice: Gluttony (more experiences, more stimulation, more options — anything to avoid the closed feeling of limitation or suffering) Recovery challenge: Using recovery activities as new stimulation rather than genuine change, bouncing between practices without sustained commitment, reframing everything positively to avoid feeling pain, abandoning recovery when it becomes unglamorous. How addiction served them: Substances provided the most intense form of the stimulation and relief from limitation that they seek. The dopamine hit perfectly matched their neurological wiring. The trap in recovery: Making recovery exciting and new rather than doing the sustained, unglamorous daily work. Talking about recovery more than doing it. Leaving when it becomes ordinary. Growth direction: Toward Type 5 — depth, focus, the willingness to go into one thing completely, sustained presence with what is. Signature slogans: 5, 16, 53, 54, 58 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q5 (coping with discomfort by staying rather than escaping), q4 (purpose with depth and substance rather than novelty), q10 (progress that is honest rather than optimistically inflated)

Type 8 — The Challenger • The Protector

Core wound: I will be controlled, betrayed, or harmed if I am vulnerable. Vice:

Lust/Excess (intensity, taking up space, testing limits, controlling their environment)
Recovery challenge: Difficulty surrendering control, seeing vulnerability as weakness, intense resentment when wronged, intimidating the community rather than joining it, all-or-nothing patterns. How addiction served them: Substances were one of the few ways an 8 could let their guard down — could finally release the vigilance that protects against betrayal. The trap in recovery: Dominating the recovery space rather than participating in it. Using strength as armor against the vulnerability that real recovery requires. Never letting anyone fully in. Growth direction: Toward Type 2 — the heart, genuine care for others, the capacity to receive as well as give, tenderness alongside strength. Signature slogans: 16, 30, 45, 49, 7 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q7 (family relationships — repaired through vulnerability rather than control), q6 (getting help — requires surrender of self-sufficiency), q3 (belonging through interdependence rather than dominance)

Type 9 — The Peacemaker • The Mediator

Core wound: My presence and priorities don't matter. Keeping the peace is more important than my own life. Vice: Sloth/Self-forgetting (not laziness but the ongoing erasure of self — merging with others, numbing through passive avoidance) Recovery challenge: Inertia in recovery, drifting through the motions without genuine self-engagement, difficulty identifying their own wants and needs, compromising recovery to avoid conflict. How addiction served them: Substances completed the self-erasure that was already the 9's strategy. The numbing felt like peace because it removed the discomfort of having a self. The trap in recovery: Going through recovery motions while remaining fundamentally absent. Merging with the recovery community's identity rather than developing their own. Avoiding their biggest issues indefinitely. Growth direction: Toward Type 3 — self-activation, the willingness to prioritize their own development, taking action in their own life rather than waiting for external momentum. Signature slogans: 1, 20, 27, 39, 54 BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move: q1 (other important things — their recovery is one of them), q4 (purpose — they have one and it matters), q10 (progress actively measured rather than passively hoped for)

Part Two: Complete Slogan-by-Enneagram Mapping

For each slogan: primary types (weight 4–5), secondary types (weight 2–3), recommendation notes, context.

Slogan 1: First, embrace the four foundations

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Spiritual

Type 9 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "The fourth foundation was written for you. Identity obsession perpetuates suffering — and your pattern has been to erase your identity entirely in order to keep the peace. Both holding on too tightly to a fixed self and disappearing into others are traps. You belong in this story. Your life has value not because of what you do for others, but because you are here."

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "The fourth foundation is your hardest work: your identity is not fixed. You are not your standards, your principles, or your record of correctness. The obsession with being the right kind of person — even the right kind of person in recovery — perpetuates suffering. You're becoming, not arriving. What would it feel like to not need to be right today?"

Type 4 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "The fourth foundation speaks directly to you: identity obsession perpetuates suffering. You have organized your inner life around being uniquely, irreparably yourself — and that organizing principle, as real as it feels, is suffering's engine. You are not your feelings. You are not your wounds. You're becoming something that no fixed story about yourself can contain."

Type 7 · Weight: 3 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "The second foundation — time is limited — is the one you most need to sit with. Your orientation toward the future keeps mortality abstract and urgency comfortable to avoid. Each day in active addiction is a day you can't recover. The urgency is real. Let it wake you up rather than speeding you past it."

Slogan 2: Treat cravings as passing thoughts

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Emotional

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your mind runs a continuous threat-detection program, and it has applied that program to recovery — producing anxious thoughts about relapse, about whether you're doing it right, about what could go wrong. This slogan is not just about substance cravings. It is about every thought that feels like an emergency and isn't. Thoughts peak and pass. Even the frightening ones. Especially the frightening ones."

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You believe your feelings are who you are. That is the deepest version of the problem this slogan addresses. When a craving arrives — or grief, or longing, or the ache of believing something essential is missing — it feels permanent and defining. It isn't. You are the awareness noticing the feeling, not the feeling itself. That distinction is your freedom."

Type 7 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You flee from discomfort faster than almost anyone. The craving arrives and before you've even fully noticed it, you've already moved — toward stimulation, toward the next thing, toward relief. This slogan asks you to pause at the craving, watch it, discover that it has a peak and a descent. Fifteen minutes. That is all that's required of you."

Type 1 • Weight: 3 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your cravings often come as compulsive thoughts: what you should have done, what you must do next, what is still wrong. These feel like responsibilities, not temptations. But they are neurological patterns, not commands. Taking every thought captive means you are allowed to let the inner critic's craving for perfection be just another wave you don't have to ride."

Slogan 3: Notice the awareness before the craving

ICARE: Identify • Domain: Intellectual

Type 5 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You already live in the observing mind — you are among the most naturally aware of any type. The invitation here is not to develop observation but to realize that observation is not detachment. The awareness you're being pointed toward is warm, not removed. It includes you. When you notice the awareness before craving, you're not retreating further into your head — you're finding the ground beneath both mind and feeling."

Type 4 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Before you felt the longing, before the ache of what's missing arrived, something was already awake and clear. That awareness has never been wounded, never been abandoned, never lacked what you think you lack. It was there before the addiction, before the loss, before the story of being fundamentally different. Notice it. It is more essentially you than anything you've lost."

Type 9 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You have spent years not noticing yourself — merging, accommodating, fading into the background. This slogan asks something radical: to notice the awareness that is purely and undeniably you, that exists before any craving or compulsion. That awareness is your self before self-forgetting. It hasn't gone anywhere. It's been here the whole time, waiting to be noticed."

Slogan 4: Don't become addicted to recovery

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Intellectual

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You are wired to find security through external structure — sponsor, meetings, community, coach. These are genuinely helpful, and they can also become a new security dependency rather than a path to internal security. When you cannot tolerate a day without your meeting, that tells you something. The goal is to carry the security inside, not to become dependent on the container that once helped you build it."

Type 2 · Weight: 4 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "There is a version of recovery addiction that looks like constant service: being the first to arrive, the last to leave, the most available helper. But if removing yourself from that role makes you feel worthless or invisible, that's information. Your recovery belongs in you, not in whether others need you. What do you do with a Tuesday afternoon when nobody needs your help?"

Type 9 · Weight: 4 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "You can merge with recovery the way you merge with everything — losing yourself in the structure, the community, the routine, and calling that recovery. But recovery requires you to show up as a self, not to disappear into another context. Do you have a personal relationship with your recovery, or are you using the recovery community to avoid having one?"

Slogan 5: Rest in the present moment

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Emotional

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You live in the past — replaying what was lost, what was never enough, what should have been different — and in the future longing for when things will finally be as they should be. Right now, in this moment, something true and workable is happening. It may not be the life you wanted. It is the life available to you right now, and it is enough to begin with. Recovery only happens here."

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your anxiety pulls you constantly into an imagined future where everything that could go wrong has. But the future you fear hasn't happened. This present moment — which your anxious mind is always racing past — is the only place your recovery is actually occurring. When you're fully here, there is no threat to process. Just this breath. Just this moment. Safe enough to be in."

Type 7 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "You are always elsewhere — in the next plan, the better scenario, the more exciting option. Present-moment practice is specifically designed for someone like you, because the present is where all the discomfort you've been avoiding lives. It is also where your actual life lives. Recovery doesn't happen in your plans for recovery. It happens right now, in this unglamorous, ordinary, sufficient moment."

Type 1 • Weight: 3 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You live in the gap between how things are and how they should be. The present rarely satisfies you because it is always measured against a better version. This slogan invites you into the present exactly as it is — not to stop wanting improvement, but to recognize that healing only happens in the moment that is actually occurring."

Slogan 6: Carry clarity into daily life

ICARE: Connect • Domain: Occupational

Type 5 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You can understand recovery more deeply than most people in the room. The challenge is that understanding and living are different acts. You have brilliant insight in the meeting and return to your patterns at home. This slogan asks you for the hardest thing: to bring what you know into what you do. Understanding recovery is not recovery. Living it is."

Type 9 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You feel clear in recovery spaces and numb in ordinary life. The meeting ends and the self you brought to it gradually dissolves back into routine. This slogan asks you to maintain the self-awareness that was present in the meeting — not just to carry a feeling, but to carry the decision that you are someone whose recovery matters even when no one is watching."

Type 3 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You perform well in structured contexts where the audience is clear. The challenge is who you are when the meeting room empties. Carrying clarity into daily life means being the same person in your car at 6pm that you were in the meeting at noon. That consistency — unperformed, unwitnessed — is the real measure of recovery."

Slogan 7: Practice give and take

ICARE: Connect • Domain: Social

Type 2 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "This slogan was built for you. You give constantly and receive rarely — not because no one offers, but because receiving feels unsafe, like it would reveal the need you've been denying. Real recovery asks you to practice both directions. Can you tell someone what you need? Can you let someone show up for you without immediately pivoting to how you can help them? That vulnerability is your recovery."

Type 5 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your natural movement is to withhold — your energy, your presence, your inner life. This slogan asks you for both directions: to receive support (which requires acknowledging you need something) and to offer yourself genuinely to another person's suffering (which requires risking contact). Your withdrawal has kept you safe. It has also kept you alone. Both need to change."

Type 8 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You give generously when you've chosen to. Receiving is the harder side. To receive support — to be held, to be vulnerable, to need something from another person — feels like a threat to the self-sufficiency that has always protected you. Your recovery requires you to be with someone else's help without managing or redirecting it. Can you let someone take care of you?"

Slogan 8: Three types of people, three remedies

ICARE: Connect • Domain: Social

Type 1 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You sort the world into what is right and what is wrong, and your aversion to the people in the 'wrong' category consumes enormous energy. Your resentment at those who violate your standards, your clinging to those who affirm them, your indifference to those who seem irrelevant — these three patterns are the relational structure of your suffering. Generosity, compassion, and genuine engagement are the practices that free you from it."

Type 4 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You have intense, story-laden relationships with your friends (profound connection) and your difficult people (profound injury). Your neutral people barely register. What this slogan reveals is that you are investing heavily in attachment and aversion while sleepwalking past the ordinary, unremarkable relationships that might actually sustain you. The barista, the neighbor, the person next to you in the meeting — they are part of your recovery too."

Type 8 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your friend-or-foe distinction is sharp and rarely revisited. People earn their category and stay there. This slogan asks you to see the fluidity of those categories — that your difficult person is also a human being carrying suffering, that your indifference to neutral people is a form of dominance, and that generosity toward all three types is the practice that dismantles the armor."

Slogan 9: Use recovery principles everywhere

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Occupational

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You are one person in the meeting and potentially a different person at work, at home, in private. Your brain is rewiring based on which patterns you repeat, and if honesty lives only in recovery spaces while image-management governs the rest of your life, guess which neural pathway is stronger. This slogan calls you to the integration that your type most resists and most needs: being the same person in every room."

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You hold principles as compartments — your recovery principles here, your standards for others there, your private behavior somewhere else. The pervasiveness this slogan asks for is total: acceptance at home, honesty in the car, humility with the person who irritates you most. Not because someone is watching. Because your brain is rewiring. Every moment is recovery or it isn't."

Type 7 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "Recovery as a compartment is one of your specific traps — you can be fully engaged and present in the meeting and then leave and rationalize everything else. If recovery principles are real, they apply to the Tuesday afternoon when you're bored and restless and looking for relief. Especially then."

Slogan 10: Begin recovery work with yourself

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Emotional

Type 2 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "This slogan was written about you. The impulse to help others before doing your own work is not purely generous — it is a way of staying needed, staying comfortable, and avoiding the vulnerability of being the one who needs help. What does your recovery look like if no one needs anything from you today? That question, and your discomfort with it, is where your recovery work begins."

Type 1 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You notice what's wrong in others with extraordinary precision, while your own plank remains unexamined. It feels like discernment. It is often projection. The quality of your help is exactly proportional to the depth of your own work. Go there first. The world's imperfections will wait."

Type 6 · Weight: 3 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "When you focus intensely on others' situations and problems, some of that is genuine care and some of it is managed anxiety — analyzing their circumstances gives you something to do with your fear. Your own recovery work is less comfortable because it is less controllable. Begin there."

Slogan 11: Use challenges as opportunities

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Emotional

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your mind treats difficulty as confirmation that things are going to fall apart. Every challenge is evidence for the worst case. This slogan asks you to practice the opposite interpretation: challenges are the precise moments when recovery builds capacity. The stress response that fires when things are hard is your brain rebuilding. What if this difficulty is the point, not a threat to the point?"

Type 4 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "You can romanticize difficulty — holding your suffering as evidence of how deeply you feel. This slogan asks something different: not to make the challenge meaningful through how it makes you feel, but to make it useful through what it reveals and what it builds. Suffering as identity is different from suffering as teacher."

Type 9 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "When challenges arrive, your first movement is toward comfort, numbness, and the path of least resistance. Staying with the challenge — asking what it requires of you rather than how to move away from it — is the practice that builds the self that your recovery depends on. You don't have to seek difficulty. But when it comes, stay with it."

Slogan 12: Stop blaming — take responsibility

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Intellectual

Type 8 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Righteous blame is one of your most well-developed tools. When you've been wronged, you know it, and you carry it with authority. This slogan doesn't dispute that you were wronged. It asks: as long as the wrongdoing remains the explanation for your current choices, who is in control of your recovery? Blame externalizes that control. Responsibility reclaims it. You are most powerful when you are most responsible."

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You carry a deep narrative of having been wronged — by your circumstances, your family, your life — and that narrative is real and also a trap. You can hold the truth of what happened to you and still take responsibility for what happens next. These are not contradictions. Acknowledging harm and claiming agency are the two movements that together constitute your recovery."

Type 6 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You externalize anxiety through blame — identifying who or what is responsible for the threat gives you the temporary comfort of a located cause. But as long as your recovery depends on external circumstances being a certain way, your recovery is as unstable as those circumstances. What changes when you take full responsibility for your own recovery, regardless of what anyone else does or doesn't do?"

Slogan 13: Be grateful to those who hurt you

ICARE: Connect • Domain: Social

Type 4 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your wounds are real, and you've carried them a long time. This slogan doesn't ask you to pretend they weren't inflicted. It asks you to extract wisdom from them — to recognize that the people who most shaped your suffering also most shaped your capacity for depth, compassion, and understanding of what human beings can do to each other. They are part of why you are here. And being here is the beginning of everything."

Type 8 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "The people who betrayed you, who violated you, who proved that vulnerability leads to harm — they taught you something about survival that kept you alive. They are also the reason you built walls that now keep out the help your recovery requires. Gratitude here isn't approval. It's the recognition that you can use what they taught you without remaining captive to it."

Type 1 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your resentment at the people who embodied everything you believe is wrong is chronic and consuming. This slogan asks for something that feels like an injustice: to find gratitude even toward those who violated your principles. Not because they were right, but because the very intensity of what they triggered shows you where your deepest work still lives."

Slogan 14: See confusion and pain as teachers

ICARE: Identify • Domain: Emotional

Type 5 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "When pain and confusion arrive, your first movement is into the mind — analyzing, categorizing, making it abstract enough to manage. This slogan asks you to stay with the pain as pain, not as a problem to be solved. What the confusion is pointing toward can't be found through analysis. It can only be found by staying with the experience long enough to hear what it's saying."

Type 6 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You treat confusion as a red flag — evidence that the threat you've been anticipating is materializing. But confusion is often just the mind encountering something it hasn't processed yet. The confusion you feel about your recovery, about what is working, about who you are in this process — it is information, not crisis. What becomes possible when you get curious about it rather than alarmed?"

Type 7 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You reframe pain into something more bearable so quickly that the pain never gets to finish what it came to teach. This slogan asks you to let the pain complete its sentence. The discomfort you've been outrunning your entire life — the grief, the limitation, the genuine difficulty of being human — it has something for you that the escape never provided."

Slogan 15: Four essentials — build, stop, face, seek

ICARE: Assess • Domain: Physical

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "All four essentials require you to actively show up for your own life — to build something, to stop something, to face something, to seek something. Your pattern is to let recovery happen to you rather than to do it. Inertia is not peace. It is the absence of the self-engagement that makes recovery real. Each of these four is a different kind of waking up. All four are necessary for you."

Type 1 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You are strong on two of the four essentials: building positive habits (you're disciplined) and stopping harmful behaviors (you're vigilant). The essentials you most avoid are facing your demons — because that requires sitting with the unpleasant truth about yourself without trying to fix it immediately — and seeking guidance from mentors — because that requires admitting you don't have all the answers."

Type 7 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You move between all four essentials without sustaining any of them — building a habit and dropping it, stopping a behavior and rationalizing your way back, facing a demon and reframing your way around it. The framework this slogan offers requires you to be consistent across all four simultaneously. That consistency is the work you've been avoiding."

Slogan 16: Pause when triggered unexpectedly

ICARE: Respond · Domain: Emotional

Type 8 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your threat response is fast, fierce, and often righteous. When triggered, the gap between stimulus and reaction is almost nonexistent — and that gap is where your recovery lives or dies. The pause isn't weakness. It's the practice that allows your actual intelligence — which is considerable — to inform your response rather than your amygdala making the decision before your prefrontal cortex arrives."

Type 4 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "When you're triggered, the emotional flood arrives with a story that feels like absolute truth: you've been abandoned, overlooked, rejected, proven right about your deepest fears. The pause creates space between the trigger and the narrative — enough space to ask whether this feeling is truth or pattern. You don't have to act from the first version of the story."

Type 6 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your anxiety response is your most practiced neurological habit. When triggered, the threat-scanning system activates before you've had a chance to assess whether the threat is real. The pause — one breath, three seconds — gives your prefrontal cortex time to evaluate what's actually happening. That moment of evaluation is where your courage lives."

Slogan 17: Cultivate five strengths

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Intellectual

Type 9 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "All five of these strengths require active self-cultivation — you have to show up for them, build them, practice them. Your recovery cannot be passive. Commitment renewed daily, practice maintained consistently, relationships chosen and tended, honest self-reflection done deliberately, and hope held actively — none of these happen to you. They are choices you make repeatedly. That repeated choosing is the recovery."

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Three of the five strengths directly address your anxiety structure: commitment (over fear), aspiration/hope (instead of catastrophizing), and honest self-reflection (trusting your own knowing). The other two — practice and positive relationships — are your stabilizers. Work all five. They are a complete anxiety-management system built specifically for long-term recovery."

Type 3 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "The fourth strength — honest self-reflection — is the one your type systematically avoids. You can cultivate commitment, maintain practice, build relationships, and project hope beautifully, while your self-reflection remains a performance. The honest version requires you to ask not 'Did I do the right things today?' but 'Who was I actually today, beneath what I showed?'"

Slogan 18: In crisis, remember five strengths

ICARE: Respond · Domain: Emotional

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "This slogan was built for how your type thinks: it is a concrete plan for the scenario you most fear. Having a written, specific, practiced protocol for when crisis arrives — what you'll do first, who you'll call, which practice you'll return to — is the 6's most powerful recovery tool. It doesn't eliminate crisis. It means you're never without a direction when it comes."

Type 7 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "You don't want to think about crisis because thinking about it means acknowledging it might come. This slogan requires you to plan for the possibility you'd rather avoid. But here's what's true: the moment of crisis is the worst time to develop a plan. Your future self, in the middle of the hardest moment, needs the plan that your present self creates."

Type 4 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Crisis can feel like the final confirmation of your deepest fears — that things are irredeemably broken, that you are fundamentally alone. Having the five strengths as a structure to return to in that moment is the difference between crisis consuming you and crisis being survivable. You've survived everything so far. This is one more thing you can survive with help."

Slogan 19: Reduce self-centeredness

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Spiritual

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Every experience is processed through the question: what does this mean about me, for me, to me? This self-referencing is exhausting and it is suffering's engine. The invitation here is not to stop caring about yourself — it's to notice how much of your mental energy is spent in the first-person singular, and to practice, even briefly, a moment of genuine interest in someone else's interior life."

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your world is organized around your own achievement, image, and trajectory. Even your service is often ultimately about how it positions you. The movement toward genuine other-focus — not as strategy, but as authentic interest in someone else's wellbeing — is your spiritual growth edge and your primary recovery medicine. Your brain needs it."

Type 2 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your self-centeredness is paradoxical: it shows up as constant focus on others, but the lens is always 'how do I appear in this relationship, what does my helping say about me, what will happen if they don't need me anymore?' Real other-focus asks about the other person — not about your role in their life."

Slogan 20: Trust your inner knowing

ICARE: Identify • Domain: Intellectual

Type 6 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your structure leads you away from your own knowing and toward external authority — if the sponsor says it, if the book says it, if the community agrees, then it must be true. But no one has lived inside your experience. No one knows your early warning signs, your rationalizations, your patterns, as precisely as you do. Learning to trust and act on what you actually know is your most profound recovery achievement."

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You have spent so long accommodating others' knowing that you've lost track of your own. What do you actually think? What do you actually want? What does your recovery actually need, beneath the approval of everyone around you? Your inner knowing has been there the whole time, waiting for you to consult it rather than override it. It knows more than you've given it credit for."

Type 2 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You redirect your knowing outward — 'I know what you need' is often 'I know what I need but it feels safer to name it in you.' Your inner knowing about your own recovery is precise and often ignored. Trusting it means acknowledging what you need rather than projecting your needs onto others as something you can give them."

Slogan 21: Maintain gratitude and joy

ICARE: Assess • Domain: Emotional

Type 4 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your gravitational pull is toward the tragic — the melancholy, the lost, the longed-for. Gratitude is not your natural climate. This slogan asks you to practice against your gravity — not to deny the depth of your feeling, but to discover that joy is also available to someone who feels as deeply as you do. A profound capacity for sorrow is the same capacity. Turn it toward gratitude and see what happens."

Type 1 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your attention naturally finds what's wrong — what needs correction, what falls short of the standard. Gratitude requires deliberately training your attention toward what is right, what is good, what is already here. This is not about ignoring problems. It's about discovering that the world contains grace as well as failure, and that your recovery depends on learning to see both."

Type 6 • Weight: 3 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your anxiety pulls you toward what could go wrong. Gratitude is the deliberate interruption of that scan — a choice to name what is actually here, what is actually working, what grace is actually present in this day. It doesn't make the threats go away. It gives them company."

Slogan 22: Staying grounded in stress = real progress

ICARE: Assess • Domain: Emotional

Type 6 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "The direct measure of your recovery is what happens when your anxiety fires at full intensity. Can you stay grounded while the threat-detection system screams that everything is about to fall apart? When you can say 'I'm anxious right now and I'm not going to act from it,' that is the evidence that your brain is genuinely changing. That equanimity, earned under pressure, is your recovery."

Type 4 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your stress response floods you — the emotional intensity rises fast and feels total. Staying grounded doesn't mean not feeling the intensity. It means maintaining the capacity to act from your values rather than from the flood. When you can be in the feeling and not be the feeling, that is measurable growth. Your BARC-10 will show it."

Type 8 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your version of not staying grounded is escalation — intensity meeting intensity. When stress arrives and you double down rather than burning hotter, when you respond rather than react, that is the evidence that something profound is shifting. The capacity for a measured response to real challenge is your most significant recovery indicator."

Slogan 23: Three basics — commit, stop harm, develop patience

ICARE: Respond • Domain: Physical

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "All three basics are antidotes to your signature challenge. Renewing commitment daily counters your drift. Stopping harmful behavior requires the active self-awareness that your self-forgetting resists. Developing patience is actually the practice that is most natural for you — but it must be an active patience, not a passive waiting that looks like patience but is really avoidance."

Type 7 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Commitment feels like a cage to you. Stopping harmful behaviors means giving up options. Patience is anathema to your orientation toward novelty and the next experience. Yet all three basics are asking for exactly what your recovery requires: the willingness to stay with one thing, long enough, consistently enough, to let it actually change you."

Type 4 • Weight: 3 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Patience is the third basic and your most specific growth edge. You want transformation to arrive with drama and depth, on your timeline. Recovery works on a longer schedule. The work you do today that produces no visible result is building something real. Trust the process even when the evidence doesn't satisfy your longing for significance."

Slogan 24: Change thinking, stay authentic

ICARE: Identify • Domain: Spiritual

Type 3 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You have performed yourself so consistently that the distance between your authentic self and your presented self may be almost invisible to you now. This slogan asks you to change the thinking patterns that supported your addiction while discovering — or recovering — who you actually are beneath them. Recovery for you is not becoming a better performer. It is finding the person who doesn't need to perform."

Type 1 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "The thinking that needs to change includes the inner critic's relentless prosecution of the self. Your core nature — your commitment to integrity, your care about doing right — doesn't need to change. The mechanism of self-punishment that delivers that commitment needs to. You can hold your values without holding yourself in contempt for falling short of them."

Type 9 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You have changed yourself so many times to fit your environment that you may genuinely not know what is authentically you and what is an accommodation. This slogan asks you to hold onto yourself as you change — to know which parts of you are genuinely being transformed and which parts of you are simply merging with something new. Remain yourself while becoming more of yourself."

Slogan 25: Don't gossip about others' struggles

ICARE: Connect · Domain: Social

Type 2 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Sharing information about others — even with care, even with apparent concern — is one of the ways you build relational currency. Knowing things about people makes you feel connected and needed. But the person whose story is circulating needs to trust that what they shared is held carefully. When you hold others' struggles privately, you build the kind of trust that actually sustains community."

Type 6 · Weight: 4 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "When you process anxiety about someone else's struggle by talking about it with others, you're using their story as material for your anxiety management. That's not care — it's co-opting. Hold what you've heard. If you're genuinely concerned, bring it to appropriate support rather than circulating it. Your anxiety is real. Their dignity is also real."

Type 1 · Weight: 3 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "When someone returns to use or struggles publicly, your instinct to analyze and evaluate is strong. Discussing their situation through the lens of what they should have done is judgment dressed as concern. Hold their story with the privacy you'd want for your own worst moments."

Slogan 26: Don't dwell on others' defects

ICARE: Respond · Domain: Emotional

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your attention is trained to find defects. It's a feature of your type — you see what's wrong with extraordinary precision, and in others it can occupy enormous mental energy. This slogan asks you to recognize that the defects you catalog most intently in others are often the mirror of your own unfinished work. Every hour of focused resentment at someone else's failure is an hour not spent on your own. Which is doing more for your recovery?"

Type 4 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your criticisms of others often carry the specific charge of envy — they don't appreciate what they have, they have what you lack, they don't feel things as deeply as you do. The intensity of your judgment is information about your own desires and wounds. What does this person's defect reveal about what you want or fear for yourself?"

Type 6 · Weight: 4 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "When you focus on others' failures and inconsistencies, you're often collecting evidence for a threat assessment — proof that people can't be trusted, that your fears are warranted. That evidence-collection is anxiety management, not discernment. The defect you keep returning to is telling you something about your own fear, not just their limitation."

Slogan 27: Work on biggest issues first

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Intellectual

Type 9 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You are an expert at everything except going directly at what matters most. The biggest issue sits in the center and you orbit it indefinitely — busy, comfortable, avoiding. You know what the biggest issue is. Your coach knows it. You've known for a while. This slogan is asking you to stop orbiting and start. The hardest part is starting. Everything after that is just continuing."

Type 7 · Weight: 5 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "You have reframed your deepest wound into something less threatening so many times that it's hard to even find it anymore. The positive orientation, the forward momentum, the exciting next thing — all of it is real and all of it is also a sophisticated system for not going to the place that actually needs attention. What would it mean to go there? What are you protecting yourself from by not going?"

Type 6 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "The biggest issue — usually the root fear that drives your anxiety — is the one that feels most dangerous to look at directly. You manage around it rather than through it. But every hour spent managing the surface is an hour not spent on the thing that drives the surface. Go to the root. With your coach, with proper support, but go."

Slogan 28: Let go of perfectionism

ICARE: Respond · Domain: Emotional

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "This slogan is addressed directly to you. Perfectionism is not a character trait — it is the mechanism of your suffering. The belief that you must be correct, that your recovery must look a certain way, that you cannot show up until you have something good to show — it keeps you out of the help you need and the community that would receive you exactly as you are. Imperfect action today is your recovery. Perfect action someday is its enemy."

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your perfectionism wears the mask of standards — you need your performance to be excellent before you'll share it, your recovery to look successful before you'll talk about it, your progress to be visible before you'll claim it. But recovery doesn't wait for a performance-ready version of itself. The imperfect, honest, messy version in front of your coach right now is the real one. That is the one that heals."

Type 4 • Weight: 3 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "Your perfectionism is about authenticity — the real version of yourself is always just out of reach, always more profound or complete than what you're currently experiencing. This prevents you from inhabiting your actual recovery. The version of you that shows up imperfectly today is the only one available for healing."

Slogan 29: Avoid toxic people, places, and things

ICARE: Respond • Domain: Environmental

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You merge with your environment. This is not a metaphor — you are neurologically susceptible to your surroundings in ways that most types are not. A toxic relationship slowly becomes your reality because you've gradually accommodated to it. An environment that normalizes use becomes your normal because you've stopped noticing the drift. Choosing your environment is the most practical and most critical recovery decision you make."

Type 2 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You stay in toxic relationships because your identity is built around being able to fix and help people. Leaving a relationship because it threatens your recovery feels like abandonment. But you cannot help anyone from inside a relapse. Your recovery is the prerequisite for your service. Protecting it sometimes means choosing yourself over someone who needs you."

Type 6 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "The familiar, even when it's harmful, can feel safer than the unknown. You may stay in toxic environments because the discomfort of uncertainty feels more threatening than the discomfort of what you know. But your brain is being shaped by what surrounds it. The security you're protecting by staying in familiar toxicity is not actually security."

Slogan 30: Don't hold grudges

ICARE: Respond • Domain: Emotional

Type 8 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You hold grudges with authority and for good reason — you were wronged, it was real, and your memory for injustice is long and precise. But your nervous system doesn't know the difference between the original injury and the rehearsal. Every time you return to the resentment, your body re-experiences the violation. You are protecting a wound that is re-injuring you every time you visit it. Releasing the grudge is not forgiveness of them. It is mercy to yourself."

Type 1 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your resentment is rarely personal — it is principled. You resent the world's imperfection, the people who don't live up to your standards, the injustices you cannot correct. This principled resentment feels righteous, which makes it harder to release. But it is consuming your nervous system and occupying space that your recovery needs. What would it feel like to put down the burden of a perfect world's failure to be perfect?"

Type 4 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your grudges are beautifully articulated and deeply held — they have texture, history, and meaning. Releasing them feels like agreeing that what happened doesn't matter. It isn't. Releasing the grudge means stopping the replay, not erasing the record. The injury was real. Your recovery also needs the energy you're spending on it."

Slogan 31: Speak well of others in recovery

ICARE: Connect • Domain: Social

Type 1 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your speech about others in recovery carries the quality of your standards — you notice their inconsistencies, their failures to do it right, their drift. What you say about others in the community shapes the culture every person you're speaking to will inhabit when they need help most. Build the community you want to arrive at when you're struggling. Start with how you speak about it when you're not."

Type 4 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your assessments of others can carry the subtle condescension of the person who believes they feel more deeply, who has been through more, who understands recovery at a level others haven't reached. Speaking well of others — genuinely, not performatively — requires releasing the comparative frame that places your experience as the standard against which others' falls short."

Type 8 • Weight: 3 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your directness is a gift and can also be a weapon, sometimes without your awareness. The person who left the meeting early, the person who keeps struggling with the same thing, the person whose recovery looks messy — they deserve the dignity of speech that sees their effort, not just their failure."

Slogan 32: Don't wait for others to fail

ICARE: Empower · Domain: Emotional

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Envy is your signature passion, and its shadow is the quiet satisfaction when someone who seemed to have what you lack doesn't have it anymore. This slogan names that shadow directly. The question it asks is not whether you're a good person — it's whether you're building your security on comparison rather than on your own becoming. What would it mean to celebrate someone's recovery as if it were evidence that yours is also possible?"

Type 3 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You track performance, including others' performance in recovery. When someone you've been competing with — even unconsciously — stumbles, there can be a moment of relief. That moment is information about where you're finding your security. Real recovery security doesn't require anyone else to be worse off. When you find it, others' success will feel like evidence of what's possible, not like a threat."

Type 1 · Weight: 3 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "There is a version of satisfaction that the 1 experiences when someone who doesn't follow the rules fails — a righteous confirmation that standards matter. Notice when that satisfaction arrives. It is not discernment. It is the comparison trap dressed in principle."

Slogan 33: Don't shame or humiliate others

ICARE: Connect · Domain: Social

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your inner critic turned outward becomes shaming behavior. You may not experience it as shaming — you experience it as holding standards, naming what's wrong, maintaining accountability. But the person on the receiving end is being told, through your speech and your energy, that they are defective. Shame closes the brain to change. Dignity opens it. Which one does your recovery community need?"

Type 8 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your directness can move into humiliation — especially when someone betrays your trust or fails to meet your standards. Calling someone out in front of others, using your considerable force to make a point, making someone feel small to make a larger one — these are tools you use without always tracking their impact. Shame has never built anyone's recovery. Your honesty doesn't have to destroy dignity to be honest."

Type 3 · Weight: 3 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "You can dismiss the people who aren't performing — a glance, a comment, a diminishment that signals they're not worth your full attention. That dismissal is a subtle form of shaming. The person who is struggling in front of you deserves your full presence, not your impatience with their pace."

Slogan 34: Take responsibility for your recovery

ICARE: Respond · Domain: Intellectual

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your anxiety externalizes — finding the cause of the threat gives you something to manage. But your recovery cannot wait for external circumstances to become safe enough. Full responsibility means: 'My recovery happens regardless of what they do, what the circumstances allow, or how much support is available.' That is the courage your type is being called toward."

Type 4 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "You hold a real and genuine wound from what was done to you, and that wound is also sometimes used as an explanation for why change is impossible. Both things can be true: what happened to you was real and it is your responsibility to recover from it. The circumstances didn't create your recovery. They created your need for it. You are responsible for the response."

Type 9 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Taking responsibility requires you to be present as a self — to say 'this is my recovery and I am actively choosing it.' Your self-forgetting can disguise itself as going along with whatever the group is doing. But recovery is personal. It is yours. No one can do it for you, and no one can prevent you from doing it."

Slogan 35: Recovery isn't a competition

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Emotional

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You are measuring. Clean time, quality of practice, recognition, the coach's approval, who has made more progress — you are measuring all of it, constantly, often without awareness. This slogan asks you to recognize that your recovery is not a performance being evaluated. The only meaningful comparison is to your own previous state. No one is keeping score except you. Stop keeping score."

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You compare upward and find yourself lacking, compare downward and find significance in your depth of suffering. Both directions feed the same hunger for confirmation that you are meaningfully different from others. Your recovery has nothing to do with how anyone else's recovery looks. It is between you and your own becoming, and it is already underway."

Type 1 • Weight: 3 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "You may compare your adherence to recovery principles with others' and find the comparison favorable. That favorable comparison is not evidence of real progress — it's evidence of the comparison trap operating. Your recovery is measured by your own growth, not by others' shortcomings."

Slogan 36: Do good without expecting reward

ICARE: Respond • Domain: Spiritual

Type 2 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You are the type for whom this slogan is hardest and most necessary. Your giving has been conditional — you give and you track whether the giving was received, appreciated, reciprocated. Not cruelly, but structurally — your worth is built on being needed and appreciated. Anonymous service, given with no expectation of return and no tracking of the response, is the practice that dismantles this structure. It is also one of the most liberating things you will ever do."

Type 3 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Service done without an audience is the 3's most challenging spiritual practice. Everything in your structure asks: who is watching, how does this reflect on me, what does this add to my narrative? Service done in secret — never mentioned, never built into your recovery story, never used as currency — trains your motivation toward something purer than performance. Try it once. Notice how strange it feels. That strangeness is information."

Type 1 • Weight: 3 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You can hold your service at arm's length, motivated partly by the confirmation that you are a correct and good person. What changes when you serve without tracking the quality of the service or whether it was received properly? What if the service just happened and no one — including you — evaluated it?"

Slogan 37: Don't use recovery to feel superior

ICARE: Empower • Domain: Spiritual

Type 1 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You have done the work."

You know that. But when you look at the person who hasn't done the work and feel the distance between you — that distance is recovery ego. The person you were in active addiction needed the same compassion you wish you'd received. The person across from you who hasn't found their way yet is not less than you. They are where you were. That knowledge calls for humility, not distance."

Type 4 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "There's a version of recovery superiority unique to your type: 'I understand recovery at a depth that others haven't accessed yet. I feel it more fully, I've been through more, I work with it more seriously.' These things may have truth in them. They also may be the old envy structure dressed in recovery clothes. Real depth doesn't need comparison to exist."

Type 2 • Weight: 4 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "Your helping can be subtly organized around being the most helpful, most essential person — which means your worth is built partly on others needing you, which means their continued struggle is, on some level, your continued purpose. Notice if any part of you needs others to not fully recover, so that your helping remains necessary."

Slogan 38: Don't build happiness on others' suffering

ICARE: Empower • Domain: Spiritual

Type 4 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "There is a version of identity built on suffering that requires your wounds to be the deepest and most real. When others suffer, it may confirm a worldview that suffering is the most authentic experience available — and that your capacity for it makes you most genuinely alive. This slogan asks: could you build your sense of significance on something that doesn't require the world to keep providing pain to validate it?"

Type 1 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your righteousness is sometimes built on the comparison between your standards and others' failures to meet them. When others fail, it confirms that standards matter. But your integrity doesn't require others to fail for validation. It can stand on its own, without the contrast. What would it feel like to be fully grounded in your own principles, unrelated to anyone else's imperfection?"

Type 2 • Weight: 3 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "Your sense of purpose and value is built, in part, on others' continued need. When someone you've been helping no longer needs you — when they genuinely recover — does that feel like success or like loss? Noticing the honest answer to that question is some of the most important work you can do."

Slogan 39: Do everything with one intention

ICARE: Connect · Domain: Spiritual

Type 9 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You need a north star because without one, you drift. A single clear intention — I am here to recover and to help others — is not a constraint. It is the clarity that cuts through the endless accommodation of others' agendas, the numbing routines, the self-forgetting that passes as peacefulness. When you have one intention, every decision becomes simpler: does this serve my recovery and my capacity to walk alongside others? Yes or no."

Type 7 · Weight: 5 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "You are a person of multiple enthusiasms and constantly branching options. A single unified intention asks you to close some doors — to say this is what I'm here for, rather than this and that and possibly also those. The depth that your recovery requires cannot coexist with unlimited options. One intention. Let it be enough."

Type 4 · Weight: 3 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your intentions are multiple and often competing — authentic expression, deep feeling, meaningful suffering, unique significance. A single orienting intention provides the clarity that cuts through the complexity of your inner life and gives your recovery a practical direction."

Slogan 40: Make amends to heal, not to relieve guilt

ICARE: Connect · Domain: Emotional

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your guilt is specific, well-documented, and consuming. You want to resolve it through amends — and the relief of resolution is real and appropriate. But when the amends becomes about your relief rather than the other person's healing, you've turned their injury into your transaction. The discomfort of sitting with guilt a little longer, without resolving it, is the practice that makes your amends genuine."

Type 2 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your amends can re-center your importance — 'I need you to know that I cared, that I tried, that I hurt over what I did to you.' Watch for whether the conversation is about what they need or about what you need them to understand about you. Sometimes the most healing amends is simply changed behavior over time, without words."

Type 4 · Weight: 3 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "Your amends can be dramatic gestures that are more about the gesture than the repair — beautiful expressions of feeling that are more satisfying to you than helpful to the person you harmed. Ask not 'how do I want to express this?' but 'what does this person actually need from me?"

Slogan 41: Two practices — morning intention, evening reflection

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Spiritual

Type 9 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Morning intention is the practice of self-activation — choosing your day before it chooses you. Evening reflection is the practice of self-honesty — asking whether you showed up for your own life today. Both of these are antidotes to self-forgetting. Both require you to hold yourself with enough importance to consult yourself, to check in with yourself, to take your own recovery seriously enough to bookend each day with it."

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "Evening honest reflection is the practice your type most needs and most avoids. Your natural evening review tends toward inflation — I did well, I showed up, I was seen favorably. The honest version asks: Who was I actually today, when no one was watching? Was I the person I set an intention to be? That honest accounting, done consistently, is how recovery deepens into character."

Type 7 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "Evening reflection requires you to look at how the day actually went rather than forward to the excitement of tomorrow. There may be things in today's review that are uncomfortable — moments of avoidance, practices skipped, discomfort managed away. The willingness to look at them honestly is the practice. Tomorrow's potential is not more valuable than today's honest accounting."

Slogan 42: Whether good or bad, stay steady

ICARE: Empower · Domain: Emotional

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Equanimity is your most visible and most important long-term recovery goal. Your emotional life moves in extremes — profound depth and acute volatility. Steadiness does not mean shallowness. It means the capacity to be in an intense feeling without being swept entirely off your foundation. When you can feel everything you feel and remain functional and connected, that is your recovery arriving at its fullest expression."

Type 6 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your version of instability runs in both directions: elated relief when the threat resolves, terrified anticipation when it approaches. Equanimity is not the absence of threat — it is the capacity to remain grounded when the threat-detection system is firing. When you can say 'I'm anxious and I'm okay,' that is your recovery at its most mature."

Type 7 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Your highs are genuine and your crashes are real. Steadiness through both — not flattening the highs, but maintaining the practices when they feel less necessary, not abandoning recovery when the crash arrives — is your empower-phase work. The meeting on a Tuesday when everything is fine is as important as the one on the day you needed it."

Slogan 43: Protect recovery and integrity — both, always

ICARE: Empower • Domain: Intellectual

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You will compromise both recovery and integrity to keep the peace. A job that threatens your recovery, a relationship that pulls toward use, a context that asks you to betray what you know to be true — you accommodate all of these because the cost of conflict feels greater than the cost of the compromise. This slogan asks you to discover that the cost of the compromise is actually the larger one."

Type 2 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You compromise your recovery to serve others — 'My needs can wait, this person needs me now.' But your recovery is the prerequisite for your service. When you protect your recovery at the cost of being less available, you are not abandoning people. You are ensuring you will still be standing when they genuinely need you."

Type 6 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You can compromise integrity for security — going along with something that doesn't sit right because rocking the boat feels too risky. This slogan asks for the courage that your growth direction calls you toward: protecting what matters most even when it creates discomfort, uncertainty, or conflict."

Slogan 44: Three difficulties — early warning, triggered response, pattern prevention

ICARE: Respond • Domain: Intellectual

Type 7 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "All three difficulties require you to look directly at the possibility of return to use — which your structure wants to reframe away from. Developing your personal early warning system means acknowledging there are warning signs. Having a plan means acknowledging there will be moments that require one. Preventing patterns means watching for the drift you'd rather not see. Each of these is the practice of honesty that your recovery depends on."

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You miss early warning signs because you've numbed your self-awareness — the drift begins and you don't notice it until it's already established. Training your early warning system means developing a finer attention to your interior state: when the practices start slipping, when the isolation increases, when the numbness deepens. These are signals. You are worth paying attention to."

Type 6 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You may have elaborate plans for managing triggers. The question is whether these plans are building genuine capacity or simply managing anxiety. A plan that requires you to execute it under pressure is different from a plan you've practiced until it's automatic. Practice the protocol before the crisis, not while you're in it."

Slogan 45: Three supports — mentors, principles, community

ICARE: Connect • Domain: Social

Type 5 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You resist all three. Mentors require you to acknowledge you need guidance. Principles require you to apply rather than analyze. Community requires you to be present and available in ways that feel intrusive. Your recovery is specifically structured around exactly the three things your type most resists. Each of them is asking you to give up a small piece of the self-sufficiency that kept you safe and has also kept you isolated."

Type 8 • Weight: 5 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Relying on supports requires vulnerability — acknowledging that you need something you can't provide yourself. That is the specific thing your protection system most resists. And it is the specific thing your recovery most requires. Choosing to lean on a mentor, to let principles override your own judgment, to be genuinely held by community — these are not weaknesses. They are the most powerful things you've ever done."

Type 1 • Weight: 3 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You may be selective about whose principles you'll follow and resistant to mentors who don't meet your standards. This slogan asks for the humility to receive guidance even when the guide is imperfect, to be part of community even when it falls short of your standards. Recovery happens in imperfect containers."

Slogan 46: Three attitudes — gratitude, appreciation, ethical conduct

ICARE: Connect · Domain: Spiritual

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Gratitude for guidance requires receiving feedback without defensiveness. Appreciation for teachings requires engaging with material you might find imperfect. Ethical conduct requires acting with integrity whether anyone is watching or not. Three of your specific growth edges, named directly. The 1 who can receive feedback with genuine gratitude has moved somewhere profound in their recovery."

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Ethical conduct — maintaining aligned values and behavior when no one is watching, when there's no performance to maintain, when nothing is being evaluated — is the 3's deepest recovery practice. It is also the one that is most difficult to fake. You either are who you claim to be or you're not. No audience. No performance. Just the question of whether you're living with integrity."

Type 8 · Weight: 3 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "Gratitude for guidance — genuine, not performed — requires the vulnerability of acknowledging that someone else can see things you can't. That humility doesn't come naturally to someone whose protection system is built on self-sufficiency. But it opens the door to the support that actually helps."

Slogan 47: Keep thoughts, words, and actions aligned

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Intellectual

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "The gap between what you think, what you say, and what you do is the specific territory of your recovery. You know things about yourself that you don't acknowledge in speech. You speak commitments you don't fully act on. This fragmentation is not malicious — it's the result of a lifetime of performing rather than being. Closing the gap is the most important work of your recovery. Even partial closure produces real healing."

Type 2 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You think: I need something. You say: I'm fine, how can I help you? You do: serve others while your own needs go unmet. This fragmentation is your specific form of the gap between thoughts, words, and actions. Alignment for you means learning to speak your actual internal state — even briefly, even imperfectly — and act from it."

Type 1 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You hold yourself to high standards and can have gaps between those standards and your actual behavior that your inner critic works hard to conceal from your own awareness. Honest alignment means seeing the gap clearly — not for punishment, but for growth. The gap is where your next work lives.”

Slogan 48: Apply recovery principles everywhere

ICARE: Empower · Domain: Occupational

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: “Integration — being the same person in every room — is your empower-phase achievement. When your boss, your family, your coach, and the stranger in the coffee shop would all describe you similarly, when what you do in private matches what you show in public, when the recovery doesn’t live only in the designated recovery space — that is what full recovery looks like for you.”

Type 9 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: “Your recovery can live in the meeting and disappear into ordinary life. Carrying recovery principles into all contexts requires you to be a self that is present everywhere, not just in spaces where the recovery structure holds you. At work, at home, in conflict, in boredom — the same principles, the same self, showing up. That consistency is your empower-phase work.”

Type 5 · Weight: 3 · Context: growth recommendation_note: “You understand recovery principles deeply. The gap is between knowing and living — between the principles as objects of analysis and the principles as the texture of how you actually move through the world. Integration means letting what you know change how you do everything, not just how you think about everything.”

Slogan 49: Work with what triggers resentment most

ICARE: Respond · Domain: Emotional

Type 8 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: “Your resentments are fierce, righteous, and long. They are also some of the most precisely targeted indicators of where your deepest wounds live and where your biggest freedom waits. The person who most triggers your rage — especially the one who violated you, betrayed your trust, exploited your vulnerability — holds the key to the part of your recovery that will transform everything else. Working with what triggers you most is your most powerful work.”

Type 1 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: “Your triggers are often about principle violations — people who are careless, dishonest, self-serving, or who simply don’t follow the rules. The intensity of your reaction is not proportional to their offense. It is proportional to how deeply this particular failure touches your own wound. What does this resentment reveal about what you most fear or most desperately need to be true?"

Type 4 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your resentments are narrative — they have characters, scenes, dialogue, a history, and deep personal meaning. They are part of your story and your identity. Working with the biggest one requires giving up a piece of the story you've organized your suffering around. That is the surrender this slogan asks for. The freedom on the other side is larger than the story you're releasing."

Slogan 50: Stay committed regardless of circumstances

ICARE: Empower • Domain: Intellectual

Type 7 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You are the type most likely to abandon commitment when it stops being interesting, when it becomes painful, when better options appear. Unconditional commitment — staying when you don't feel like it, when other things are calling, when the glamour has faded and recovery is just the quiet Tuesday work — is the practice that your type most resists and most transforms you. Go back to the meeting you don't want to go to. That is where your recovery is built."

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Your self-forgetting means your commitment to your own recovery is perpetually at risk of being the first casualty of accommodation. When life gets hard or someone needs something from you or the path forward requires conflict, your recovery is the thing that quietly steps aside. This slogan asks you to make your recovery non-negotiable — not louder than everything else, but present even when everything else is louder."

Type 6 • Weight: 4 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You may hedge your commitment — staying somewhat available to other options, maintaining ambivalence as a form of protection. If recovery doesn't fully work, at least you didn't fully commit. This hedge is fear pretending to be wisdom. Full commitment means: I am here, regardless of what happens. That is also courage. That is your growth direction."

Slogan 51: Three essentials — service, practice, compassion

ICARE: Connect • Domain: Spiritual

Type 5 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "All three essentials break through your withdrawal. Service requires you to show up for others. Spiritual practice requires you to engage with something beyond pure intellect. Compassion requires you to open the heart that closed for your protection. Your wisdom, your depth, your capacity for insight — all of it is more alive in service than in isolation. These three essentials are specifically the medicine your type needs."

Type 9 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "All three require self-activation. You cannot drift into service, practice, or compassion — you have to choose them, show up for them, invest in them. Each is an antidote to a different face of your self-forgetting: service counters passivity, practice counters drift, compassion counters numbness. Together they constitute the 9's recovery curriculum."

Type 7 • Weight: 3 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "Sustained spiritual practice — not exciting new techniques, but the same practice done consistently over time — is your specific growth edge among the three. Depth of practice is the 7's recovery gift and greatest challenge. Everything in your structure wants to move. This practice asks you to stay."

Slogan 52: Watch for six common distortions

ICARE: Assess • Domain: Intellectual

Type 3 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "All six distortions map to your structure. Performed patience, yearning for worldly recognition, excitement about achievement rather than growth, selective compassion, priorities organized around acquisition and image, joy only in success — this is a taxonomy of the 3's self-deception. Working through this list with ruthless honesty is some of the deepest work available to you. Each one is a version of performing recovery rather than living it."

Type 2 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "The compassion distortion — having compassion only for people you like, only for people who need you — and the joy distortion — difficulty genuinely celebrating people who have stopped needing you — are specifically the 2's recovery audit items. Look at these two honestly. They will show you where love has become transactional."

Type 4 • Weight: 4 • Context: core recommendation_note: "The joy distortion is yours in particular: difficulty genuinely rejoicing in others' good fortune, especially when they have what you long for. This is envy named clearly. It is also your invitation: what would it feel like to celebrate someone's good fortune as if it were evidence that good fortune is possible for you too?"

Slogan 53: Be consistent in your practice

ICARE: Assess · Domain: Intellectual

Type 7 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your pattern is intensity and abandonment — fully present for the exciting new practice, gone when the novelty fades. Consistency is specifically antithetical to your neurological wiring. Which means it is specifically the practice your recovery requires. Show up for the meeting you've been to a hundred times and find it valuable. Practice the same technique until it becomes part of you. Don't break the chain."

Type 4 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You practice when you're inspired and stop when the feeling changes. Recovery practiced only when inspiration is present is not recovery — it's performance. Consistency regardless of feeling — showing up for the practice when you feel nothing, when it feels mechanical, when it seems pointless — is building the neural pathway that will be there when you genuinely need it."

Type 9 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Your inconsistency is quiet — not dramatic bursts and crashes, but the gentle drift away from practice that happens when nothing is actively holding you accountable. The daily mark on the calendar, the consistent meeting, the same slogan for a full week — these small consistent acts are the 9's recovery structure. Show up for them even when no one is watching."

Slogan 54: Commit fully — no half measures

ICARE: Empower · Domain: Intellectual

Type 9 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Half measures are your default architecture. You avoid full commitment because full commitment means risking conflict, taking up space, and claiming that your recovery matters as much as anyone else's needs. All of that is true. Your recovery does matter as much. Going all in is the most radical act available to you — and it is the one your recovery requires."

Type 7 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Full commitment closes options. It forecloses the possibility of a different, more exciting path appearing. Your structure resists this. But the depth that your recovery is capable of producing cannot coexist with one foot perpetually pointed toward the exit. What would it mean to burn the exit? What becomes possible when this is truly, completely, finally your path?"

Type 6 · Weight: 4 · Context: growth recommendation_note: "You hedge. You maintain ambivalence as protection — if you're not fully committed, you can't fully fail. But half-committed recovery produces exactly the fragile results you fear. Wholehearted commitment is the specific form of courage that your type is being called toward. It is terrifying and it is also the only thing that works."

Slogan 55: Free yourself through honest self-examination

ICARE: Identify · Domain: Intellectual

Type 3 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You have the most comprehensive self-deception system of any type. You have performed yourself so consistently and so skillfully that the distance between your authentic self and your presented self may have become invisible to you. Honest self-examination requires you to ask: who am I when I'm not being observed? What do I actually feel? What do I actually want? Those questions, asked honestly, are the door to your recovery."

Type 9 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You have self-examined around what others need, what the group thinks, what will keep things peaceful. Self-examination that is genuinely about you — what you actually think, feel, need, want, fear — is not something your type does naturally. It requires you to place yourself at the center long enough to really look. What you find there is not shameful. It is the self that your recovery is for."

Type 2 · Weight: 4 · Context: core recommendation_note: "You believe your self-narrative with genuine conviction: I have no needs, I only want to help, I am here for others. Honest self-examination peels back that narrative to find the need structure beneath the helping — the desire to be loved unconditionally, the fear of being unwanted, the hunger for care that you redirect outward because receiving it feels too vulnerable. What is actually there when you look?"

Slogan 56: Don't wallow in self-pity

ICARE: Respond · Domain: Emotional

Type 4 · Weight: 5 · Context: core recommendation_note: "Self-pity is your most immediate and specific recovery challenge. You are the type most equipped to feel everything deeply, and the most at risk of making your deepest feelings into a permanent address. This slogan doesn't ask you to feel less. It asks whether you're living in your pain as identity or moving through it as a teacher. There is a difference between profound feeling and making suffering a home. You know the difference. It is time to act on it."

Type 6 · Weight: 4 · Context: stress recommendation_note: "Your version of self-pity sounds like anxiety: 'Poor me, everything is threatening, nothing is safe, I can never catch a break.' This is the catastrophizing loop turned into a narrative of victimhood. Acknowledging the challenge is honest. Rehearsing it as the permanent condition of your life is self-pity. What changes when you say 'this is hard' instead of 'this is impossible'?"

Type 9 • Weight: 3 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "Your version of self-pity is quiet and invisible — not dramatic like the 4, but persistent. A low hum of resignation: nothing will change, my needs don't matter anyway, what's the point. That quiet wallowing is as corrosive as the dramatic kind. It just doesn't announce itself."

Slogan 57: Don't be jealous of others' recovery

ICARE: Empower • Domain: Emotional

Type 4 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Envy is your passion — your defining emotional orientation. It says: they have what I lack, what is most essentially absent in me. This slogan addresses it directly and completely. The recovery you're jealous of is not unavailable to you — it is the evidence that recovery is real and possible. Let their success be proof of yours. What would it mean to genuinely celebrate someone's recovery as if it were good news for you too? Because it is."

Type 2 • Weight: 4 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "Your jealousy is specific: you envy people who receive love, care, and appreciation without having to earn it through service. You've built your life on the premise that love must be earned, and then you resent the people who seem to receive it freely. The insight available here is that the love you're jealous of is also available to you — when you stop making it conditional on your indispensability."

Type 3 • Weight: 3 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "When someone achieves what you've been working toward, the competitive structure in you can register it as a threat rather than inspiration. Notice that response. Their achievement is not your diminishment. It is evidence that what you want is attainable."

Slogan 58: Take recovery seriously

ICARE: Empower • Domain: Intellectual

Type 7 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "Frivolousness about recovery is your specific risk. You can make it light to avoid its weight, use humor to sidestep the moments when the weight needs to land, treat the meeting as entertainment rather than medicine. This slogan asks for reverent seriousness — not grimness, not heaviness, but the recognition that your life genuinely depends on this and that recognition should inform how you show up for it."

Type 9 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You take recovery seriously in meetings and forget it exists when you leave. The seriousness this slogan calls for is not occasional intensity — it's the steady, non-dramatic recognition that your recovery matters in every room, every day, regardless of who's watching. That sustained seriousness is itself a form of self-respect."

Type 4 • Weight: 3 • Context: stress recommendation_note: "You can be cavalier about recovery practices when the inspiration isn't there — skipping what doesn't feel meaningful, waiting for the deeper experience before returning to the practice. Seriousness here means showing up for the practice regardless of whether it feels significant in the moment."

Slogan 59: Don't expect praise for staying in recovery

ICARE: Empower • Domain: Spiritual

Type 3 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "This is your hardest and most transformative practice. Your entire structure is organized around external validation — the performance, the applause, the proof that your effort was seen and valued. Recovery done without an audience — genuine, unperformed, unseen transformation — is what your type most needs and most resists. When you can stay in recovery without requiring anyone to notice, you've found something your type has spent a lifetime looking for without knowing where to look."

Type 2 • Weight: 5 • Context: core recommendation_note: "You need appreciation as the condition for your self-worth. Service without recognition is the most challenging thing your type can practice. This slogan asks: what if you stayed in recovery, helped others, showed up fully — and no one thanked you, no one noticed, no one affirmed the effort? Could your recovery stand on its own, independent of being seen and valued for it? That independence is your freedom."

Type 1 • Weight: 3 • Context: growth recommendation_note: "You can expect recognition for doing the right thing — for maintaining your principles, for working hard at recovery, for holding higher standards than others. When that recognition doesn't come, resentment arrives. This slogan invites you to do the right thing because it's right, not because someone is keeping score. Including yourself."

Part Three: Outcome Measurements by Type

What measurable progress looks like for each type practicing the slogans. Tied to BARC-10 dimensions and SAMHSA wellness domains.

Type 1 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q5_coping` — reduced self-punishment after mistakes; coping without the inner critic as prosecutor
- `q2_good_life` — genuine belief that a good life is possible without perfection being a prerequisite
- `q10_progress` — progress measured honestly against own growth rather than against an impossible standard

Observable behavioral markers:

- Able to acknowledge a mistake without extended self-flagellation
- Speech about others in recovery is constructive rather than evaluative
- Engages with recovery tools without rigidly requiring them to be done correctly
- Can receive feedback without defending or immediately correcting the feedback-giver
- Shows warmth and humor alongside their standards
- Returns to use does not produce shame spiral — produces honest assessment and re-engagement

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Emotional (reduced internal prosecutorial activity)
2. Social (softer, less critical engagement with community)
3. Spiritual (ability to receive grace as genuinely unearned)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 26, 28, 30, 31, 37, 49

Type 2 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q6_getting_help` — genuine willingness to ask for and receive support
- `q1_important_things` — having things in life that matter beyond service to others
- `q3_belonging` — belonging that is not earned through helping

Observable behavioral markers:

- Can name what they need in a session without pivoting to the coach's needs
- Sets and maintains limits in relationships without collapsing from guilt
- Expresses a want, desire, or preference without framing it as something that will benefit others
- Receives appreciation without deflecting it back toward the other person
- Stays in recovery when no one needs them; recovery is for them, not for what it enables

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Emotional (contact with own interior state)
2. Physical (self-care practices that are not predicated on first caring for others)
3. Social (relationships with genuine reciprocity)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 7, 10, 36, 40, 51, 59

Type 3 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q4_purpose` — purpose with depth and substance beyond achievement and recognition
- `q3_belonging` — belonging not contingent on performance
- `q10_progress` — honest progress assessment, not inflation

Observable behavioral markers:

- Says "I don't know" without apparent discomfort
- Shares genuine struggle in the meeting without managing how it reflects on them

- Demonstrates the same quality of engagement in private that they show in community
- Evening reflection practice yields honest rather than favorable assessments
- Service done without any subsequent mention of it

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Intellectual (honest self-knowledge)
2. Spiritual (purpose not predicated on achievement)
3. Emotional (genuine feeling rather than performed feeling)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 9, 35, 41, 47, 55, 59

Type 4 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q2_good_life` — genuine belief that a good life is available to them, not only to others
- `q3_belonging` — belonging despite the deep conviction of fundamental difference
- `q4_purpose` — purpose beyond the significance-seeking that drives envy

Observable behavioral markers:

- Practices consistently during uninspired periods without waiting for the feeling to return
- Celebrates someone else's recovery without visible discomfort
- Self-pity language decreases in sessions; agency language increases
- Can acknowledge jealousy without building a narrative around it
- Emotional expression remains present and deep without being the organizing principle of all conversation
- Returns to use produces less prolonged self-narrative

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Emotional (movement rather than residence in feeling)
2. Social (genuine celebration of others)

3. Spiritual (identity not organized around wound)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 5, 12, 21, 42, 56, 57

Type 5 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q3_belonging` — actual embeddedness in community, not just attendance
- `q6_getting_help` — willingness to receive support without first having exhausted self-sufficiency
- `q9_contribution` — actively contributing rather than observing

Observable behavioral markers:

- Volunteers information about their interior state before being directly asked
- Remains present in emotionally demanding interactions without visibly withdrawing
- Uses mentors as mentors, not just as information sources
- Shows warmth and genuine care in relational interactions, not just precision
- Brings what they know in their mind into what they do in their life
- Community participation has texture and depth, not just regular attendance

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Social (presence in relationship)
2. Emotional (contact with own feeling life)
3. Occupational (recovery principles enacted rather than just understood)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 3, 6, 7, 45, 51

Type 6 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q5_coping` — coping without catastrophizing; functional response to difficulty
- `q2_good_life` — genuine belief that a safe, good life is available, not just that it might be taken away

- `q6_getting_help` — help sought and received with trust, not with contingent skepticism

Observable behavioral markers:

- Stress response is measurably slower and less intense
- Can make a decision without seeking multiple external confirmations
- Engages with difficulty as workable rather than as threat confirmation
- Expresses trust in their own assessment of a situation
- Can sit with uncertainty without requiring immediate resolution
- Anxiety is acknowledged and not acted on

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Emotional (stress regulation)
2. Intellectual (self-trust over external authority)
3. Social (relationships that are genuinely trusting rather than strategically selected)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 2, 18, 20, 22, 43, 50

Type 7 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q5_coping` — coping with discomfort by staying rather than escaping
- `q4_purpose` — purpose with depth rather than novelty, that sustains over time
- `q10_progress` — honest progress assessment rather than optimistically inflated accounts

Observable behavioral markers:

- Returns to the same practice for a third, fourth, fifth consecutive week
- Acknowledges pain directly without reframing it into something more manageable
- Shows up to the meeting that doesn't have anything new to offer
- Crisis is met with a plan rather than immediate action to change the circumstance
- Recovery narrative includes genuine difficulty alongside growth

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Intellectual (depth of engagement with one thing)
2. Emotional (willingness to stay with discomfort)
3. Spiritual (commitment as a form of freedom rather than limitation)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 5, 16, 53, 54, 58

Type 8 Outcome MarkersBARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q7_family` — relational repair through vulnerability rather than control
- `q6_getting_help` — willingness to receive support as strength rather than as weakness
- `q3_belonging` — belonging through interdependence rather than through dominance

Observable behavioral markers:

- Shares genuine vulnerability with coach or community without reframing it as strength
- Responds to conflict with measured engagement rather than escalation
- Expresses care for others with tenderness alongside strength
- Resentment is worked with rather than rehearsed
- Asks for help directly, without managing the help after it's received
- Someone else's authority is acknowledged and respected rather than contested

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Emotional (from intensity to depth; from escalation to presence)
2. Social (interdependence over dominance)
3. Physical (release of chronic physiological tension that accompanies vigilance)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 7, 16, 30, 45, 49

Type 9 Outcome Markers

BARC-10 dimensions most likely to move:

- `q1_important_things` — their recovery is genuinely one of those things; they treat it accordingly
- `q4_purpose` — they have one and it is distinctly theirs, not merged with someone else's
- `q10_progress` — actively measured and honestly reported rather than passively hoped for

Observable behavioral markers:

- States a preference, desire, or need directly without hedging
- Brings a challenging topic to the session without waiting to be asked about it
- Takes an action in their own recovery interest that inconvenienced someone else
- The practices are maintained without external accountability structure requiring it
- Disagreement is expressed — calmly, but expressed
- Their recovery story includes their own agency, not just the support they received

Wellness domain improvement sequence:

1. Intellectual (self-activation; knowing and acting on their own inner knowing)
2. Occupational (recovery principles carried into all contexts, not just recovery spaces)
3. Spiritual (purpose and identity that are distinctly theirs)

Primary slogans producing these outcomes: 1, 20, 27, 39, 43, 54

Part Four: Database Seed Reference

slogan_personality_maps — Enneagram Rows

```
framework_type_id = enneagram (id from lkp_personality_framework)
enneagram_context_id: core=3, growth=1, stress=2, wing=4
```

```
Format: slogan_id | framework_key | context | weight | note (abbreviated)
```

```
-- — COMPLETE SEED: SELECT HIGHEST-WEIGHT ENTRIES PER SLOGAN —————
```

```

-- Full recommendation_notes are in Part Two above.
-- This table shows the primary (weight 5) mapping per slogan for QA.
-- All weight 3-4 entries should also be inserted using notes from Part Two.

-- SLOGAN 1
('1', 3, 5, 'Fourth foundation speaks to 9 self-forgetting'), -- Type 9, core
('1', 3, 5, 'Identity obsession = 1 core wound named directly'), -- Type 1, core
('1', 3, 4, 'Identity obsession = 4 defining struggle'), -- Type 4, core
('1', 1, 3, 'Time is limited speaks to 7 avoidance'), -- Type 7, growth

-- SLOGAN 2
('6', 3, 5, 'Threat-thoughts feel permanent - 6 core practice'), -- Type 6, core
('4', 3, 5, 'Feelings are not identity - 4 core freedom'), -- Type 4, core
('7', 1, 4, 'Stay with craving 15 min - 7 avoidance pattern'), -- Type 7, growth
('1', 3, 3, 'Compulsive thoughts as passing - 1 inner critic'), -- Type 1, core

-- SLOGAN 3
('5', 1, 5, 'Observing mind - 5 home territory, now warm'), -- Type 5, growth
('4', 3, 5, 'You are more than your feelings - 4 core freedom'), -- Type 4, core
('9', 1, 4, 'Reconnect with interior life beneath self-forgetting'), -- Type 9, growth

-- SLOGAN 4
('6', 3, 5, 'Recovery as new security dependency - 6 trap'), -- Type 6, core
('2', 2, 4, 'Helping as recovery activity avoidance - 2 stress'), -- Type 2, stress
('9', 2, 4, 'Merging with recovery community - 9 stress pattern'), -- Type 9, stress

-- SLOGAN 5
('4', 3, 5, 'Living in past/future longing - 4 core practice'), -- Type 4, core
('6', 3, 5, 'Catastrophizing future - 6 anxiety directly'), -- Type 6, core
('7', 1, 4, 'Escaping present into better scenario - 7 growth'), -- Type 7, growth
('1', 1, 3, 'Gap between is and should - 1 growth toward 7'), -- Type 1, growth

-- SLOGAN 6
('5', 1, 5, 'Understanding vs living - 5 growth edge'), -- Type 5, growth
('9', 3, 4, 'Clarity in meeting, numb in life - 9 core'), -- Type 9, core
('3', 1, 4, 'Same person in meeting and at 6pm - 3 growth'), -- Type 3, growth

-- SLOGAN 7
('2', 3, 5, 'Give AND take - 2 core recovery practice'), -- Type 2, core
('5', 1, 5, 'Withholding - 5 growth into genuine contact'), -- Type 5, growth
('8', 1, 4, 'Receiving requires vulnerability - 8 growth'), -- Type 8, growth

-- SLOGAN 8
('1', 3, 5, 'Friend/foe/neutral = 1 relational structure'), -- Type 1, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Intense attachment and aversion - 4 pattern'), -- Type 4, core
('8', 3, 4, 'Rigid friend-foe categories - 8 core challenge'), -- Type 8, core

```

```

-- SLOGAN 9
('3', 3, 5, 'Same person in every room - 3 core integration'), -- Type 3, core
('1', 3, 5, 'Full integration of principles - 1 core work'), -- Type 1, core
('7', 1, 4, 'Compartmentalization - 7 growth challenge'), -- Type 7, growt

-- SLOGAN 10
('2', 3, 5, 'Help others to avoid self - 2 core pattern'), -- Type 2, core
('1', 3, 4, 'See others faults before own - 1 plank/speck'), -- Type 1, core
('6', 2, 3, 'Analyze others to manage own anxiety - 6 stress'), -- Type 6, stres

-- SLOGAN 11
('6', 3, 5, 'Challenges confirm everything will fall apart - 6'), -- Type 6, core
('4', 1, 4, 'Romanticize difficulty vs use it - 4 growth'), -- Type 4, growt
('9', 1, 4, 'Stay with challenge vs numb away - 9 growth'), -- Type 9, growt

-- SLOGAN 12
('8', 3, 5, 'Righteous blame - 8 self-protection pattern'), -- Type 8, core
('4', 3, 5, 'Narrative of being wronged - 4 core trap'), -- Type 4, core
('6', 1, 5, 'Blame as externalized anxiety - 6 growth to courage'), -- Type 6, gr

-- SLOGAN 13
('4', 1, 5, 'Extract wisdom from wounds - 4 growth'), -- Type 4, growt
('8', 1, 5, 'Betrayal as teacher - 8 growth toward Type 2'), -- Type 8, growt
('1', 1, 4, 'Gratitude toward imperfect world - 1 growth'), -- Type 1, growt

-- SLOGAN 14
('5', 1, 5, 'Stay with pain vs analyze it away - 5 growth'), -- Type 5, growt
('6', 3, 5, 'Confusion as info not threat - 6 core shift'), -- Type 6, core
('7', 1, 4, 'Let pain finish its sentence - 7 growth edge'), -- Type 7, growt

-- SLOGAN 15
('9', 3, 5, 'All four require self-activation - 9 core'), -- Type 9, core
('1', 3, 4, 'Avoids facing demons, prefers outer correction - 1'), -- Type 1, core
('7', 1, 4, 'Jumps between four without sustaining - 7 growth'), -- Type 7, growt

-- SLOGAN 16
('8', 3, 5, 'Fastest threat response - 8 critical practice'), -- Type 8, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Emotional flood - 4 pause creates distance'), -- Type 4, core
('6', 3, 4, 'Anxiety hair trigger - 6 pause as courage'), -- Type 6, core

-- SLOGAN 17
('9', 3, 5, 'All five require self-activation - 9 core'), -- Type 9, core
('6', 3, 5, 'Five strengths address anxiety structure directly'), -- Type 6, core
('3', 1, 4, 'Honest self-reflection is 3 growth edge'), -- Type 3, growt

-- SLOGAN 18
('6', 3, 5, 'Concrete plan for feared scenario - 6 core practice'), -- Type 6, cor

```

```

('7', 1, 4, 'Plan for crisis 7 avoids acknowledging – 7 growth'),-- Type 7, growt
('4', 3, 4, 'Crisis as final confirmation of fear – 4 structure'),-- Type 4, core

-- SLOGAN 19
('4', 3, 5, 'Self-referencing is 4 core structure'),          -- Type 4, core
('3', 3, 5, 'World organized around own performance – 3 core'), -- Type 3, core
('2', 3, 4, 'Indispensability as self-centeredness – 2 paradox'),-- Type 2, core

-- SLOGAN 20
('6', 3, 5, 'Distrust inner knowing, seek authority – 6 core'), -- Type 6, core
('9', 3, 5, 'Lost own knowing through self-forgetting – 9 core'),-- Type 9, core
('2', 1, 4, 'Project knowing outward – 2 growth to self-trust'), -- Type 2, growt

-- SLOGAN 21
('4', 1, 5, 'Against gravity toward melancholy – 4 growth'),    -- Type 4, growt
('1', 1, 4, 'Train attention toward what is right – 1 growth'), -- Type 1, growt
('6', 1, 3, 'Reorient from threat scan to presence – 6 growth'), -- Type 6, growt

-- SLOGAN 22
('6', 3, 5, 'Direct measure of 6 recovery progress'),          -- Type 6, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Emotional flooding – staying grounded = progress'), -- Type 4, core
('8', 3, 4, 'Measured response vs escalation – 8 progress'),    -- Type 8, core

-- SLOGAN 23
('9', 3, 5, 'All three counter 9 self-forgetting inertia'),     -- Type 9, core
('7', 3, 5, 'Commitment, discipline, patience – 7 antidotes'), -- Type 7, core
('4', 3, 3, 'Patience – 4 specific growth edge'),              -- Type 4, core

-- SLOGAN 24
('3', 3, 5, 'Finding self beneath performance – 3 core work'), -- Type 3, core
('1', 1, 4, 'Change inner critic, keep integrity – 1 growth'), -- Type 1, growt
('9', 3, 4, 'Change without merging into change – 9 core'),     -- Type 9, core

-- SLOGAN 25
('2', 3, 5, 'Information as relational currency – 2 pattern'),   -- Type 2, core
('6', 2, 4, 'Gossip as anxiety processing – 6 stress pattern'), -- Type 6, stres
('1', 2, 3, 'Analysis of others' mistakes as judgment – 1 stress'),-- Type 1, str

-- SLOGAN 26
('1', 3, 5, 'Catalog others' defects – 1 core pattern'),        -- Type 1, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Criticism charged with envy – 4 pattern'),         -- Type 4, core
('6', 2, 4, 'Defect-collecting as threat evidence – 6 stress'), -- Type 6, stres

-- SLOGAN 27
('9', 3, 5, 'Expert at orbiting biggest issue – 9 core'),       -- Type 9, core
('7', 1, 5, 'Wound reframed until unfindable – 7 growth'),     -- Type 7, growt
('6', 1, 4, 'Root fear vs managed surface anxiety – 6 growth'), -- Type 6, growt

```

```

-- SLOGAN 28
('1', 3, 5, 'Perfectionism = 1 core vice in recovery'),          -- Type 1, core
('3', 3, 5, 'Performance-ready version vs honest presence - 3'), -- Type 3, core
('4', 2, 3, 'Ideal authentic self prevents real showing up - 4'), -- Type 4, stres

-- SLOGAN 29
('9', 3, 5, 'Merges with environment - most susceptible type'),  -- Type 9, core
('2', 3, 4, 'Stays to help at cost of own recovery - 2 pattern'), -- Type 2, core
('6', 3, 4, 'Familiar toxic safer than uncertain unknown - 6'),   -- Type 6, core

-- SLOGAN 30
('8', 3, 5, 'Long righteous grudges - 8 signature pattern'),      -- Type 8, core
('1', 3, 5, 'Principled resentment at world's imperfection - 1'), -- Type 1, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Grudge as identity narrative - 4 pattern'),          -- Type 4, core

-- SLOGAN 31
('1', 3, 5, 'Critical speech as standards-holding - 1 pattern'),  -- Type 1, core
('4', 1, 4, 'Subtle condescension of depth - 4 growth edge'),     -- Type 4, growt
('8', 1, 3, 'Directness that crosses into harshness - 8 growth'), -- Type 8, growt

-- SLOGAN 32
('4', 3, 5, 'Schadenfreude as envy's shadow - 4 core'),           -- Type 4, core
('3', 3, 4, 'Relief at competitors' stumble - 3 competitive structure'), -- Type 3
('1', 2, 3, 'Righteous confirmation of consequences - 1 stress'), -- Type 1, stres

-- SLOGAN 33
('1', 3, 5, 'Critical voice turned outward = shaming - 1 core'), -- Type 1, core
('8', 3, 5, 'Humiliation as control tool - 8 core pattern'),      -- Type 8, core
('3', 2, 3, 'Dismissal of non-performers - 3 stress pattern'),    -- Type 3, stres

-- SLOGAN 34
('6', 1, 5, 'Blame as anxiety externalization - 6 growth to courage'), -- Type 6,
('4', 1, 4, 'Narrative of being wronged + responsibility - 4 growth'), -- Type 4, ('9', 3, 4, 'Self-forgetting disguised as going along - 9 core'), -- Type 9, core

-- SLOGAN 35
('3', 3, 5, 'Constant measurement - 3 core structure'),          -- Type 3, core
('4', 3, 5, 'Upward and downward comparison - 4 envy structure'), -- Type 4, core
('1', 2, 3, 'Favorable comparison via principles - 1 stress'),    -- Type 1, stres

-- SLOGAN 36
('2', 3, 5, 'Giving with expectation = 2 core wound'),           -- Type 2, core
('3', 3, 5, 'Anonymous service = 3 hardest practice'),           -- Type 3, core
('1', 1, 3, 'Service without quality tracking - 1 growth'),       -- Type 1, growt

-- SLOGAN 37

```

```

('1', 3, 5, 'Recovery standards as superiority – 1 core trap'), -- Type 1, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Depth of recovery as significance – 4 ego trap'), -- Type 4, core
('2', 2, 4, 'Most helpful = most essential = superior – 2 stress'),-- Type 2, str

-- SLOGAN 38
('4', 3, 5, 'Identity built on wound requires ongoing pain – 4'),-- Type 4, core
('1', 3, 4, 'Righteousness built on others failing – 1 core'), -- Type 1, core
('2', 2, 3, 'Others' need as condition for 2's purpose – 2 stress'),-- Type 2, st

-- SLOGAN 39
('9', 3, 5, 'North star counters drift – 9 core medicine'), -- Type 9, core
('7', 1, 5, 'One intention closes branching options – 7 growth'),-- Type 7, growt
('4', 1, 3, 'Single intention cuts through 4 rumination – 4 growth'),-- Type 4, g

-- SLOGAN 40
('1', 3, 5, 'Guilt relief vs other's healing – 1 core challenge'),-- Type 1, core
('2', 3, 4, 'Re-centering own importance in amends – 2 pattern'),-- Type 2, core
('4', 2, 3, 'Dramatic gesture vs genuine repair – 4 stress'), -- Type 4, stres

-- SLOGAN 41
('9', 3, 5, 'Bookend each day with self – 9 core anti-drift'), -- Type 9, core
('3', 1, 5, 'Honest evening review vs inflation – 3 growth edge'),-- Type 3, grow
('7', 1, 4, 'Evening reflection vs forward escape – 7 growth'), -- Type 7, growt

-- SLOGAN 42
('4', 3, 5, 'Equanimity = 4 primary recovery achievement'), -- Type 4, core
('6', 3, 5, 'Grounded in both relief and threat – 6 core goal'), -- Type 6, core
('7', 1, 4, 'Steady through highs and crashes – 7 growth'), -- Type 7, growt

-- SLOGAN 43
('9', 3, 5, 'Compromise both for peace – 9 signature pattern'), -- Type 9, core
('2', 3, 4, 'Recovery yields to others' needs – 2 core trap'), -- Type 2, core
('6', 1, 4, 'Integrity over security – 6 growth to courage'), -- Type 6, growt

-- SLOGAN 44
('7', 3, 5, 'All three require acknowledging relapse risk – 7'), -- Type 7, core
('9', 3, 5, 'Numb self-awareness misses early signals – 9'), -- Type 9, core
('6', 3, 4, 'Plan vs anxiety management – 6 core distinction'), -- Type 6, core

-- SLOGAN 45
('5', 3, 5, 'Resists all three – 5 core recovery structure'), -- Type 5, core
('8', 1, 5, 'All three require vulnerability – 8 growth'), -- Type 8, growt
('1', 1, 3, 'Selective about mentors and principles – 1 growth'),-- Type 1, growt

-- SLOGAN 46
('1', 3, 5, 'Gratitude for guidance = receive feedback – 1 core'),-- Type 1, core
('3', 3, 5, 'Ethical conduct when unobserved – 3 core test'), -- Type 3, core

```

```

('8', 1, 3, 'Gratitude for guidance = vulnerability - 8 growth'),-- Type 8, growt

-- SLOGAN 47
('3', 3, 5, 'Fragmentation between performing self and authentic self'),-- Type 3
('2', 3, 4, 'Gap between denied need and serving others - 2'),    -- Type 2, core
('1', 3, 4, 'Gap between standards and actual behavior - 1'),    -- Type 1, core

-- SLOGAN 48
('3', 3, 5, 'Same person in every room = 3 integration marker'), -- Type 3, core
('9', 1, 4, 'Present in recovery, absent elsewhere - 9 growth'), -- Type 9, growt
('5', 1, 3, 'Knowing into doing - 5 integration work'),          -- Type 5, growt

-- SLOGAN 49
('8', 3, 5, 'Fierce righteous long grudges - 8 deepest work'),  -- Type 8, core
('1', 3, 5, 'Resentment at principle violations - 1 core work'), -- Type 1, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Narrative resentment as identity - 4 release'),      -- Type 4, core

-- SLOGAN 50
('7', 3, 5, 'Abandon when unglamorous - 7 core challenge'),      -- Type 7, core
('9', 3, 5, 'Self-forgetting yields recovery to accommodation'), -- Type 9, core
('6', 1, 4, 'Hedge commitment as protection - 6 growth courage'),-- Type 6, growt

-- SLOGAN 51
('5', 3, 5, 'All three break withdrawal - 5 recovery curriculum'),-- Type 5, core
('9', 3, 4, 'All three require self-activation - 9 core'),        -- Type 9, core
('7', 1, 3, 'Sustained practice depth - 7 growth edge'),         -- Type 7, growt

-- SLOGAN 52
('3', 3, 5, 'All six distortions = 3 self-deception taxonomy'),  -- Type 3, core
('2', 3, 4, 'Compassion and joy distortions - 2 specific audit'), -- Type 2, core
('4', 3, 4, 'Joy distortion = envy named clearly - 4 core'),      -- Type 4, core

-- SLOGAN 53
('7', 3, 5, 'Intensity and abandonment pattern - 7 core challenge'),-- Type 7, co
('4', 3, 4, 'Practice only when inspired - 4 consistency gap'),  -- Type 4, core
('9', 3, 4, 'Quiet drift from practice - 9 consistency gap'),    -- Type 9, core

-- SLOGAN 54
('9', 3, 5, 'Half-measures = 9 default architecture'),          -- Type 9, core
('7', 3, 5, 'Full commitment closes options - 7 core resistance'),-- Type 7, core
('6', 1, 4, 'Hedge as protection vs wholehearted courage - 6'),  -- Type 6, growt

-- SLOGAN 55
('3', 3, 5, 'Most comprehensive self-deception - 3 core work'),  -- Type 3, core
('9', 3, 5, 'Find self under years of self-erasure - 9 core'),   -- Type 9, core
('2', 3, 4, 'Genuine self-narrative vs actual need structure - 2'),-- Type 2, cor

```

```

-- SLOGAN 56
('4', 3, 5, 'Self-pity as identity = 4 most specific challenge'),-- Type 4, core
('6', 2, 4, 'Catastrophizing as self-pity loop - 6 stress'),      -- Type 6, stres
('9', 2, 3, 'Quiet resignation as invisible wallowing - 9 stress'),-- Type 9, str

-- SLOGAN 57
('4', 3, 5, 'Envy = 4 signature passion, this slogan for Type 4'),-- Type 4, core
('2', 2, 4, 'Envy of unconditional love - 2 hidden wound'),      -- Type 2, stres
('3', 2, 3, 'Competitor's failure as relief - 3 stress pattern'),-- Type 3, stres

-- SLOGAN 58
('7', 3, 5, 'Frivolousness = 7 specific recovery risk'),        -- Type 7, core
('9', 3, 5, 'Seriousness in meeting, absent elsewhere - 9'),     -- Type 9, core
('4', 2, 3, 'Cavalier when uninspired - 4 stress pattern'),      -- Type 4, stres

-- SLOGAN 59
('3', 3, 5, 'Recovery without applause = 3 hardest practice'),   -- Type 3, core
('2', 3, 5, 'Service without appreciation = 2 deepest challenge'),-- Type 2, core
('1', 1, 3, 'Right thing without recognition - 1 growth'),       -- Type 1, growt

```

Quick Reference: Highest-Relevance Slogans by Type

TYPE 1 — REFORMER

Weight 5: 26, 28, 30, 31, 33, 37, 49

Weight 4: 1, 8, 10, 13, 15, 21, 23, 24, 32, 38, 40, 47

TYPE 2 — HELPER

Weight 5: 7, 10, 36, 40, 55, 59

Weight 4: 2, 19, 20, 25, 29, 37, 43, 52

TYPE 3 — ACHIEVER

Weight 5: 9, 32, 35, 41, 46, 47, 48, 52, 55, 59

Weight 4: 6, 17, 19, 24, 33, 36, 37

TYPE 4 — INDIVIDUALIST

Weight 5: 5, 12, 13, 19, 21, 32, 38, 56, 57, 42

Weight 4: 2, 3, 8, 11, 14, 30, 49, 53

TYPE 5 — INVESTIGATOR

Weight 5: 3, 6, 7, 45, 51

Weight 4: 14, 48

TYPE 6 — LOYALIST

Weight 5: 2, 12, 18, 20, 22, 44, 50

Weight 4: 4, 10, 11, 14, 17, 26, 27, 29, 34, 42, 43

TYPE 7 — ENTHUSIAST

Weight 5: 5, 16, 23, 27, 39, 44, 50, 53, 54, 58

Weight 4: 7, 11, 15, 18, 41, 42, 51

TYPE 8 — CHALLENGER

Weight 5: 12, 16, 30, 33, 45, 49

Weight 4: 7, 8, 13, 22, 31, 43

TYPE 9 — PEACEMAKER

Weight 5: 1, 4, 15, 17, 20, 23, 27, 29, 39, 41, 43, 44, 50, 54, 58

Weight 4: 3, 6, 11, 19, 24, 34, 42, 48, 51, 53, 55